The Hotel Beat.

"Talk about your hotel beats," said a clerk in a hotel in Cleveland, Ohio, the other evening. "I heard of one of the toughest cases which happened a short time ago. I got the first part of the story from the proprietor of a prominent restaurant, to whom the tellow told a history of the affair before he skipped out of and orders from the country solicited with a town. He said that one evening this fellow came in and sat down to a table, giving his orders with the sir of a millionaire. He was ticely dressed, and were a long, handsome ulster. After he had finished his supper he started out, seeming to forget that he hadn't paid. The proprietor stopped him with a reminder of the fact, when it was found that the fellow was a bear, and hade't a cent of money. The restaurateur was angry, and about to administer a dose of leather 'neath the tails of that elegant ulster when the fellow begged off, and said he would leave his pantaloons with the proprieter as security till morning. The genleman, in order to test him consented, and the fellow went behind the screen and divested himself of the aforementioned garment, having only the light covering of his underclothing. With his ulster buttoned close around him, he still had the appearance of a finely dressed gentleman with his pantaloous stuffed in his boot tops. He left his breeches and west out. Entering a certain prominent hovel he wa'ked to the register, entered his name, demanded ... be shown to his room, and instructed the clerk to have him called at So'cleck in the morning. all of which was complied with; but when the boy called him at So'c'ock the air about that room was blue with profanity and the fellow ordered the boy to seed the landlord up immediately. The landlers, thinking something terrible had happened, immediately repaired to the room and found his guest apparently in a terrible rage. He wanted to know what kind of a house they kept.

"Just look here," said he, "my pantaloons, containing my pocket-book and watch, are good, and some one connected with this bons tack them, for they must have crawled in over the transom. I tell you I'll give this place away to every man on the road." The landlerd was The landlord wis considerably chaggined about the matter, and sent out for a pair of papialoons, and as the rest of the clathes were very elegant, an elegant pair was purchesed. The fellow was then taken to treakfast, and shown the best attention the vats in great variety, Wamsutta Shirts; also 50 degen more of those Devonshire Towels at $3 house could affird. After breakfast the land. lord gave him tweety deliars, as he had to leave immediately, and promised to leave no stone unturned until the thief was discovered. The cute young gentleman went to the restaurant. redcemed his trowsers told the story, and skip ped the town about ninescen dollars and fifty by a young fellow cabing himse'f "Lieutentant Courtenay," On arriving at Untenhage, he obtained lodgines at a branding house. He called on several of the leading tradesmen, and upon two or three ministers; he announced that he had just arrived from Natal, having obtained his discharge from the Sixteenth lancers, that he had been in nearly all the trincipal engagements during the Zata war; notably Zhob lane Hill and Ulundi, at both of which he had very parrow escapes from being killed; that ho had visited the field of Isandula soon after that sad catestrophe, and he wished to give a series of lectures on the war. He engaged the Dotch Reformed church school room and advertised his lecture. It being wet, no one turned up. and the lieutenant, to make sire of an audieces the next day sent out a large number of free tickets. That evening over fifty people attended, and it was very evident the lie userwho was dressed in a white shell tunic with black frogging, dirly ton boots and spurs-knew very little of the wer, Sir B. Frero's policy and the movements of Lord Chelmsford and the troops during the war, except from newspaper reports. He interspersed his lecture at intervals with sones such as "My Grandfather's Clock," and "I Musn't Say Anything Wrong," but it was evident that his songs made as little impression as his locture. After that evening he made two other attempts, but they were utter failures. In the meantime the lieutenant had been employing his time very profitably at the bearding establishment where always stood No. 1 in our market, and we inhe had been staying. He borrowed a watch, which he broke and then took to the witchmaker to be repaired. He also borrowed a gentleman's horse, upon which he rode about town, and made free with the watch of a person name; Wolfo. The boarding house keeper discovered his loss and had the lieutenant apprehended.— At the gaol Courtenay overcame their scruples, and leaving a watch with the gaoler and prom-ising to appear in the morning, was allowed to go home again. The following morning, how-ever, Courtenzy had vanished, and it was then found that a lodger's box had been broken open and $7 10s. and some forty estrich feathers extrected. A warrant was obtained, and two con-stables proceeded te Port Elizabeth where he was arrested and brought back to Uttenhage in s new suit of black cloth. He was brought up before a magistrate and remanded. It is believed the secured was a trooper named Bamp-ton, of the Natal carabineers and went to Port Elizabeth with the Frontier Light Horse. He gave one or two of his lectures in Port Elizabeth ed to, and on as good terms as if the parties were and had a very fair sudience.
